Course Description:

This course explores the rules of ethical conduct in a business context. Contrary to popular opinion, ethics in business in the United States is NOT personal, NOT relative, and NOT individual. There is a mandatory code of conduct that must be followed for long-term economic success in a democratic capitalistic society. This class will cover the basic ethical principles that every business person doing business in the United States needs to know. In addition, international ethical standards will be discussed to determine whether there will be more uniform global ethical standards in the future.

Course Objectives:

1. Develop an understanding of the major ethical principles embedded in American law that impact all businesses.
2. Understand how morality, ethics and law are inextricably intertwined in business conducted in a democratic capitalist economy.
3. Understand that most countries outside of the U.S. have significantly different ethical and legal frameworks which makes conducting business overseas challenging.
4. Realize that ethical standards are broad principles that require an ability to handle ambiguity.
5. Develop an ability to assess and manage risk more effectively.

Preparation Required for the First Day of Class (First Weekend):

2. Read and study the following numbered articles from “Business Ethics”, Annual Editions, 2003/04, edited by Dr. John Richardson”, ISBN No. 0-07-283847-7 (McGraw-Hill/Dushkin): (these are very short articles): 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 31, 33, 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 45.

3. Bring at least one current article in the area of business ethics (see topics listed above) and be ready to discuss it with the class (Make 30 copies of the article to pass out to other class members).

4. There will be a QUIZ on “Animal Farm” AND “Business Ethics” (mentioned above under numbers 1 and 2) on the first day of the first weekend class. YOU ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR READING AND UNDERSTANDING THIS MATERIAL PRIOR TO THE FIRST DAY OF CLASS. The quiz grade is final.

GRADING:

a. Grades will be assigned on a plus(+)/minus(-) basis.

b. Grades are not arrived at through negotiation. The only reason a grade will be changed is if there is a mathematical error in the calculation.

c. Failure to be prepared for class may lead to a grade being lowered. This is a discussion class; students are expected to come to class and be prepared.

d. Any instance of cheating will result in a grade of “F” for the course and the student will be reported to the Ethics Committee for further disciplinary action, as appropriate.

e. Once a quiz begins, no one may leave the room until such person’s quiz is completed and has been turned in to the professor.
